Hello. My name is Pat Lee. I am the Human Resources manager for Universal Construction, Inc. I would like to employ your services to design a system for tracking employee information. Right now, we keep information about our employees on paper in filing cabinets. We have to store all Employee Action Forms for an indefinite period of time. You can imagine the problems we encounter keeping track of all the paper forms, not to mention the space required to store them.

I need to track basic information about our employees, like their current status, names, and addresses, as well as their salaries, when they were hired, and what projects they are working on. I also need to know the date that this information was most recently updated.

If an employee leaves the company, I need to know what day they left. And I need to keep a history of any changes that have been made for each employee. For example, I need to know when they got a raise or changed departments. We periodically like to review this information to see, for example, what our average salary increases have been. Changes are made using the Employee Action Form. I can give you a copy of the form.

Given the somewhat seasonal nature of our business, many of our employees take a leave of absence during the rainy season when there isn't as much work available.

We also have quite a few employees who take leave at various times during the year for medical or personal reasons. There are times when an employee might be assigned to as many as five different projects, which can be very demanding.

Unfortunately, injury or fatigue is often the result, but we have no choice if we want to remain competitive. Of course, when an employee is on leave, he or she cannot be assigned to any projects. Tracking leaves of absence is actually one of the primary uses of the Employee Action Form.

Just to give you a little bit of background about the company -- we've got 500 employees. Our specialty is residential apartment building construction."

"Here is a copy of our Employee Action Form. I suppose there are a couple of things I should explain.

The action effective date is the date that the change will officially take place. The next section specifies the current information for the employee and any changes that should be made. I have already told you about our departments. The employee status is either A for active, I for inactive, or L for leave.

If the employee is taking a leave of absence, the third section must be filled out to specify the first day of the leave and, if possible, the date that the employee will be returning to work. A reason code for the leave of absence must also be provided. The valid reason codes are D for disability, M for military, R for rainy season, and P for personal."
